

National Art Education Association. She has even volunteered her time at Crayons to Computers over the past two summers. Inside the walls of Princeton High School Melissa has presenting technology workshops to the staff, is the Art Club Advisor, voluntarily creates all graphic art needs for the school, and just like all teachers at Princeton High School, teachers six classes. This year, Melissa will be teaching a new class, Animations, that she developed curricula for and worked to have it added to the course catalog this year.

Beyond all of the amazing leadership and professional qualities that Melissa possesses, she is an excellent classroom teacher. She is constantly seeking ways to differentiate her instruction and motivate her students. She is also working hard this year to bring in educational technology for her students. It is clear that Melissa cares about her kids, and they care about her. She is patient, understanding, and loving, but she also holds high expectations and encourages students to produce the best work. Melissa's passion for student success is clear and enduring.

I have never worked with a teacher like Melissa. She is unbelievably hardworking and committed. She will always follow through on tasks, and typically produce above and beyond work. She has an innate ability to think about others and build relationships. Beyond all of Melissa's amazing qualities, she is humble. Sometimes, I think she is so humble people do not always see how amazing she is. She cares about her profession and is passionate about her student's successes.

Please consider Melissa Sand as teacher of the year at Princeton High School.